It was a comprehensive education model for getting working children and vulnerable youth into education or decent employment, enabling them to influence decisions that affect their lives and advocate for their rights.

With the support of FCDO through Manusher Jonno Foundation CPD is implementing a project where 8000 hazardous working children receiving education from multiple centre to get enrolled themselves into formal schools. Withdrawn working children and children at risk to be labour are enrolled in NFE program in two shifts. The children whose age is over to admit the formal school, they receive non-formal education through child club approach of CPD. So it helps to the older children to be involved in education.

Health

CPD implemented the project titled "PAP Development Project" funded by LAFARGE from 2002 to 2012 and "Adolescent Reproductive Health Project" funded by USAID/BCCP from 2008 to 2011 and "SUCHONA Project" funded by Save the Children from 2016-2017 at Dhaka and Sylhet.

Training courses provide technical skills for specific trades such as electronics, industrial sewing and apparel, and screen-printing. Each training course is operated by an industry professional with a child-friendly, and engaging, hands-on approach.

CSR is an efficient tool to persuade corporations to participate and contribute to the child rights agenda by combating the most harmful child labor practices. By supporting vocational training and learning about existing labor laws, employers and corporations move away from harmful child labor to providing safe and decent work. Employers in the formal sector increase their competitive advantage by gaining access to skilled labor through apprenticeships and job placements.

Micro credit

As the parents sometimes are not interested and force their children to earn money instead of mainstreaming them, CPD has introduced credit program for their parents. Parents, specially the mothers are involved different income generating work. This incentive created a very good impact in sending children to the school. The older children also have the access in micro credit after completion of market relevant vocational training. So these children go for self-employment.

All these naturally influencing women to grownup and live with a lower self-image and a tendency to be submissive to exploitative behavior. Exploitation is to its highest level when a woman is illiterate, unskilled and dependent on man. Her suffering increases when she is pregnant and when she has frequent child births. CPD has been engaged in various activities to help them to participate in the economically productive role, to raise the awareness and knowledge level (about social, health and family planning) of women and adult to strengthen their position in the society. This would make them aware to change their attitude about child rights issue, about providing education to both women and adolescents. Responsive government performance, transparency of information and decision-making and robust accountability mechanisms are essential for the realization of children's rights. Parallel to this, an active and well-organized civil society in support of children's rights is an important counterpart to governmental actions.
